The lever goes up and forces a lever down on top of the unit giving the AEG its jump. I thought the TM MP5s were time consuming to change barrels, but this one takes the cake. The cylinder is a little longer than the normal TM cylinders by a couple of millimeters, but the piston and piston head are the same as all AEG TMs. Also, you will notice that there is no jump adjustment in the gap as in the G&G M14 (read on for more details). Unlike most TM guns, the jump adjustment is not located in the gap as you would expect when opening the bolt. Much like a Ver 6, it is very basic with a new type of cylinder, cylinder head, nozzle, tappet plate and spring guide. The arrow pointing to the base shows how the jump works. The highlighted area shows a small built-in gauge to see how well the screw has been adjusted. We do not readjust or install metal bushings, just a simple spring drop. I managed to hit a pole the size of a human torso (a thin human torso) at 180 feet with the adjusted hopper using the iron sight. The stock gun delivers a nice 700 rounds per minute with an 8.4v supply and draws 11AMPS on full auto. Unlike most AEG's, this safety will physically disengage the electric current and lock the trigger so that no accidental fire can occur. The gun does not shoot loudly like other TM guns, but it is not super quiet like an AUG or a P90. The only thing you need to be careful about is that the little plug can get stuck inside the stock and make removing the top a real pain. The only feature missing from the Marui model is that the selector switch does not release the anti-reverse latch by pulling the selector switch back. The screw opens all the way, unlike the G&G model, and makes very satisfactory metal the metal clink when released. Therefore, when upgrading this model, you must be extremely careful not to break these parts the biggest failure would be the possibility of updating due to lack of parts at this time, since the parts developed by Marui are all new and unique. This makes the old Sig 551 and 550 a breeze! On the opposite side of the gearbox, you can see the selector plate and the eIA @ctricos contacts for the safety switch. Engine wires are also connected as the default Marui motor connectors. Here's a good side view of the short-type engine. But never use it as an excuse to point that at a person without playing in a skirmish. Remove the gun A© much more difficult than the G&G rifle and more complex than most AEG's. It can be adjusted with the magazine on the gun, so that it does not get in the way of the magazine when trying to adjust the jump. The stock butt folds up as the G&G model and the door opens to the side instead of down as the G&G model. The shooting range is a bit like the G&G model, but the actual trigger does not separate from the exchange box as the G&G model. The OD M14 comes in an OD box and the M14 imitated wood comes in a brown box. The adjustment and finishes on the shotguns are globally attractive and adequately reflect the high production µ of Tokyo Marui. The gun fired 410-415fps with an Excel 0.20g BB (non-bio) and had a good rate of fire with an 8.4v source. However, the lighter weight and slightly less than The authentic touch and appearance of the TM M14 does not mean lack of quality, efficiency or robustness by any means. Here's the Olive Drab (OD) version. And here I'm working with a wooden pattern. The security switch works like the actual version but not as rigid as the actual version or the G&G model. The trigger is very responsive and the report is ³. Immediately, this shotgun has the tallest fps of the box of any other TM AEG. The path was pretty straight, because I was using a 0.20g BB and ,41M ,41M iuraM oykoT a lareg me ,otnev ed ocuop nu me yrev gi.) The wood finish imitation is not as realistic as Marui Thompson or AK, but it is very close and still very attractive and realistic. It is extremely easy to "blink" up or down. The stock of Do has an extremely smooth texture in general with some checks where the weapon is usually held for a more "tactical" feeling. The receiver and barrel have a beautiful realistic matrade finish. With a source of 9.6V the fire rate rose to about 800 bullets per minute. The weapon can only fit a large standard 8.4v battery or one of the AEX 9.6V 1700 custom batteries that we use for AK-47's. Oh well, I do not think you can have it all. You know that when you are in semi as well as complete automoty and the selector is a bit easier to manipulate than the G & G model. The only thing we did not expect was the lack of space for a large 9.6V battery. Stock Spring is slightly thicker, so stock speed is a little stronger out of the box. And finally, right, you can see the angle that the engine height screw should take to adjust the engine. The spring guide looks like a see 3, but with slightly longer and thin posts. I tested it and the gun fires directly to more than 100 stocks with an Explore darling BB (not bio). The small hole you see in the photo on the left is actually the engine height adjustment. This allows the adjustment to be done from the base of the shotgun and thus make the adjustment simple and accurate. The new gearbox is truly simple once open. On the other hand, the finishing of the metallic components are very well done. In general, the performance of a Marui weapon is excellent and attention to detail is excellent. Quality of final classification: * Reliability:  Comfort:  External:  Performance: * Value:  Value: * Value : * External links www.airsoftextreme.com, this is placed in the middle of this particular weapon Stock As we all hope. The switch selector is great and is very responsive. We installed a Spring System M120s just to see what kind of speed this baby would push. There was a slight breeze so that BB curses in the last few feet, but did not fall. This does not translate into trouble from the switch "clicks" in place and do not fit only in place. The pipe and Flash Hider are very detailed and seem extremely realistic. The marks in the rifle are very true for the image of the specification. Very unprecedented looking and will make the acquisition of your easy task. The TM M14 Standard magazines seem 70 bb à "¢ s as most of Marui's standard magazines. ,magazines.
